Charges on El Salvador Make U.S. Data an Issue

By Barbara Crossette

WASHINGTON - The State Department, in response to increasingly sharp criticism of El Salvador's government, has begun questioning American news re-ports of atrocities in that nation on a case-by-case basis.

The question of how American diplomats gather information abroad and what the State Department does with it has become the focus of congressional and public attention this week as members of the House and Senate hold hearings on the administration's recent decision to certify that El Salvador had been making progress in re-ducing vinlence and human rights

With elections set for March 28 in El Salvadnr, the issues of Washington's policy toward the mili-tary-civilian junta and how that junta is running the country are also generating heated exchanges within the United States. Some foreign policy interest groups with research facilities of their own have become more outspoken in opposing U.S. policy, prompting the administration to counter with attempts to influence public opin-

Absent from information offered by the administration, however, has been evidence of the buildup in weapons in El Salvador that Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. mentioned in testimony Tuesday before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

ters, even giving you a general approach represents a certain degree of sensitivity."

Apart from aerial and satellite surveillance, diplomats and intelli-gence agents in El Salvador have access to a range of sources, according to State Department offi-cials. Refugees, deserters from guerrilla forces, Salvadoran mili-tary men, the other governments, the local press, church and welfare organizations and journalists all provide the embassy in San Salva-dor with information that diplomats say they then have to sift and weigh according to its source.

"In this country things are often so unclear that you have to look at something from a variety of angles," said the press attache in the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador, who did not want his name used for security reasons.

Americans travel around the country, occasionally moving in and out of rebel areas, officials say. Contact with rebel groups within the highly charged atmosphere of a civil war is difficult, but contact can take place in other capital cities, diplomats say.

In addition, U.S. International Communication Agency officers in San Salvador compile a daily me-

However, Thomas O. Enders, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, acknowledges that accurate facts on events in El Salvador, particularly in rebel-beld areas, are still "hard to establish."

Nevertheless, Mr. Enders said the administration had requested embassy investigations into reports of government atrocities, such as the allegations of a massacre in December of scores of civilians in the northeastern province of Morazán and a raid last weekend near San Salvador in which 19 people were reported killed.

In the case of the Morazán kill-ings, Mr. Enders told congression-al committees Monday and Tuesday, an assistant military attaché and another embassy official had been sent to an area neighboring the rebel-held zone to investigate.

Preliminary findings of that inquiry were released Monday by the State Department in an effort to counter press reports of large-scale

massacres by government units. According to the press spokes-man for the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador, the two investigators were able to reach the village of Jocositique, within three miles (five kilometers) of the village where a number of the killings were reported to bave taken place.

The team flew over the village at about 2,000 feet and took pictures, the spokesman said. The diplomats decided not to attempt a landing when their plane was fired on from the ground, according to the em-bassy. The photographs and other information gathered are still being analyzed.

The conducting of specific investigations by U.S. embassies — distinct from the normal collection of information for use in the field and by the State Department - is

U.S. Proposes Draft Arms Pact

Plan for Weapons in Europe Embodies Previous Offers

The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — The United States has proposed a draft arms treaty in talks with the Soviet Union in Geneva that would carry out President Reagan's proposal in re-duce intermediate-range nuclear forces, the White House an-nounced Thursday.

"Such a treaty would be a major contribution to security, stability and peace," the president said in a written statement, "I call on President Brezhnev to join us in this important first step to reduce the nu-clear shadow that hangs over the peoples of the world."

On Wednesday in Moscow, President Leonid 1, Brezhnev of the Soviet Union proposed a two-thirds cut in U.S. and Soviet medi-um-range nuclear weapons in Eu-rope by 1990 and said the United States was avoiding serious negotiations on the issue.

The White House spokesman, David R. Gergen, said that the United States saw nothing new in the Soviet proposal and that the administration had already found it unacceptable.

Mr. Gergen said that the U.S. treaty draft announced Thursday embodied no new proposals but reflected the president's arms re-duction policy outlined in Novem-

He said the Soviet Union was seeking to include aircraft and other nuclear systems in the early talks. This, he said, "needlessly complicates the negotiations at an early stage rather than focusing on the systems over which NATO and the Soviet Union have expressed greatest concern — that is, land-hased nuclear missiles."

Mr. Gergen also said the Soviet focus on weapons systems "in Europe" ignored Soviet missiles based east of the Ural Mountains.

Congress Is Restive On Salvadoran Aid

Liberal lawmakers have long been critical of the human rights record of the Duarte government ard its failure to find the murderers of three American nuns who were doing missionary work in El Salvador at the time of their deaths. That incident helped spur

What triggered the latest protest on Capitol Hill was a decision by the White House to make that certification. The administration also said it would send an additional $55 million from unrestricted Pentagon funds. In congressional testi-mony Tuesday, Mr. Haig vowed that Washington would do "whatever is necessary" to prevent the overthrow of the Salvadoran regime by leftist guerrillas.

In reply, more than 30 members of Congress introduced a resolution Tuesday opposing the presi-dent's certification. The resolution appears to have little chance for Concern about human rights is probably the main motive behind the growing opposition to the Salvadoran aid package. Rep. O'Neill said Wednesday that Congress was being heavily lobbied on the issue by Roman Catholics, including priests and nuns who bave served as missionaries in the country.

Emerging Hard-Line Faction In Polish Party Is Reported

By John Damton

New York Times Service WARSAW - A strong conservative faction has emerged among the ruling authorities and is arguing against a return to political re-form, the revival of Solidarity as an independent union and the holding of negotiations with Lech Walesa, a number of Polish sourccs say. The new "hard-liners," the sources said Wednesday, include several members of the Communist Politburo, the Warsaw party organization, the higher school of social sciences within the Central Committee and especially the Min-istry of the Interior. That ministry is responsible for law and order and is the sole institution over which Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski does not have direct and absolute

"It's a little bit like the CIA in America, an empire all unto it-self," said one knowledgeable source. "It's taken a beating for a year and a half, was constrained by all kinds of limitations. Now, suddenly, the situation has turned around. It's not just revenge outright, but a feeling of: 'All right, now we'll show who is really running the place'."

Notices Sent

One of the current mysteries of the Polish situation concerns an agreement to start negotiations between the government and Mr. Walesa, the detained Solidarity leader, that was reached as far back as early January. The agreement called for Mr. Walesa to be assisted by at least three advisers - Wieslaw Chrzanowski and Jan Olszewski, both lawyers, and mist and sociologist. Under the ar-rangement, Mr. Kukulowicz would et model. be voluntarily interned with Mr. Walesa to provide him with company.

In mid-January the advisers were informed that the talks would begin immediately. A similar notice came one week ago, and on Friday the talks were again said to be "in the works." But so far they have not been held.

"Somebody keeps throwing a wrench in the works," said one source close to the situation. He said, nonetheless, that be believed the negotiations would start soon.

The source said "those who direct the hard-liners remain in the shadows — they don't step for-ward." And those who do step forward, such as Albin Siwak, a conservative worker on the Politburo, are being used primarily as instru-ments in a larger battle, the source

Language Harsh

A high party source from the Central Committee indicated that a bitter power struggle was under way. He mentioned a new, threepage manifesto called "Platform of the Left" that has been circulating anonymously. It calls far a decisive battle to oppose and purge the moderate "revisionists" and mentions by name Kazimierz Barcikowski, a longtime Politburo member, Hieronim Kubiak, a professor from Krakow also on the Politbu-ro; Andrzej Werblan, a former member of the secretariat; Deputy Premier Mieczysław Rakowski and Jerzy Wiatr, bead of the Central Committee's research department,

The document, phrased in harsh language, is a call to orthodox

The hard-line forces, the party source said, are a loose amalgam conservatives associated with Rzeczywistose, a conservative weekly that has not yet been allowed to publish again; last year's party "forums" in Katowice, Poznan and elsewbere; the higher school in the Central Committee headed by Gen. Norbert Michta and numerous local party organizations, including the one in War-saw beaded by Stanislaw Kociolek.

A major part of the conservative campaign is an effort to restore to a position of prominence Tedeusz Grabski, the hard-liner who at the party congress last July challenged Stanislaw Kania, the party leader at the time. Mr. Grabski was ousted from power last summer but is trying to make a comeback.
"It's like an iceberg," the Central Committee source said. "Those over the water don't occu-py positions of prominence, except course for Siwak. Below the waterline are people who are very active but very careful not to identify themselves too openly against General Jaruzelski."

Much of the struggle is taking place at numerous local party meetings throughout the country between the hard-liners and those who, in the context of martial law, can be viewed as taking a middleof-the-road position.

"It can be pretty brutal. When Siwak speaks, he openly calls Ku-biak an agent for the CIA," the party source said.

The source said he expected an

French involvement in Central America is apparently spurred by the desire to catch up with other countries — the United States, West Germany and Spain — that have a longer involvement there.

French interest in Central America is colored by the personal experiences in the region of some influential Socialists, including Régis Debray, a Mitterrand adviser who has largely eschewed his former revolutionary rhetoric in favor of a more pragmatic tone.

The Socialist Party is seeking an expanded role in French foreign policy as the government's domesic policies encounter difficulties. It intends to focus more oo Central America, Mr. Huntzinger said, ending a period in which the French Socialists' only real Third World terrain was Africa.

Brazilians Look to Cuba For New Sales

In separate statements, the heads of Brazil's shipbuilding and auto manufacturing. associations praised the trip as a move to open a new market. "I am sure we could offer Cuba virtually everything," Mr. Barreto said. "Brazil has already attained a level of industrialization capable of attending the oceds of a country like Cuba," he added.

The Brazilian group did not ne-gotiate specific sales, but Mr. Barreto said that he was surprised by the number of Brazilian products already in use in Cuba.

Brazil recently made exports a top priority, with the goal of sell-ing enough abroad to pay for im-ported oil. Brazil imports 75 percent of the petroleum it consumes. Brazilian recognition of the Castro government seems unlikely for the moment, and some trade analysts say that this will tend to curh any unofficial third-party trade.

Last year, Cuba imported about $300 million worth of products from Argentina, its largest Latin American trading partner. In reum, the Argentines received mostly sugar, tobacco, and citrus fruits. All these products are exported by Brazil as well. The fact that Cuba seems to have little to sell that Brazil does not have already may create a problem for developing trade. Without Cuban commodities to trade for Brazilian goods and without access to government-subsi-dized credit, Brazilian manufacturers would have to turn to private banks to finance major exports.

Brazilian bankers, however, are wary of making loans to Communist countries short of hard currency. Brazil is now rescheduling a $1.5 billion debt owed by Poland. Nevertheless, Mr. Barreto, who owns 23 companies, believes that commerce with Communist countries can be profitable. Two years ago, he won the exclusive franchise to sell his brand of coffee at the Moscow Olympics. He plans to lead a trade delegation to China later this year. Two weeks ago, Mr. Barreto, a

Pact Formed To Aid Junta In Salvador

Honduras, Costa Rica Join in Effort by U.S.

By Alan Riding New York Times Service TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras -Quietly encouraged by the Reagan administration, Honduras, Costa Rica and El Salvador have formed a political alliance apparently aimed at bolstering the Salvadoran junta and isolating Nicaragua's

To date, the so-called Central American Democratic Community exists only on paper, but its political objectives were endorsed at a meeting here Jan. 27 attended by the foreign ministers of Venezuela and Colombia and by a senior U.S.

Creation of the community, however, has already brought protests from Nicaragua, Guatemala and Panama, which were not invited to participate, and has added to political differences in the region.

The main purpose of the initiative appears to be that of generative interesting in the control of the control of the initiative interesting in the control of the contro

ing international support for the Salvadoran elections March 28, which many foreign governments have criticized as unlikely to bring peace to the country unless preced-ed by negotiations with the guerril-la-led opposition.

Regional experts said that, by associating El Salvador with Honduras and Costa Rica, the region's only authentic democracies, the Salvadoran electoral process might gain credibility. Although Guate-mala is scheduled to hold general elections March 7, its government was excluded because of its human rights record.

On the other hand, Nicaragua and Panama, which sympathize with the Salvadoran opposition and have called for a negotiated solution to the civil war, have indicated that they could not have accepted the declaration issued Jan. 19 in Costa Rica when the community was formed. But both were clearly unhappy at not having been informed of their neighbors'

The meeting here last week had the twin purposes of enabling the new civilian government in Hon-duras to ratify its participation in the alliance and of obtaining public recognition of the community's objectives from the United States, Venezuela and Colombia.

In a joint statement, the foreign ministers of Honduras, Costa Rica, H Salvador, Venezuela and Colombia and the assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, Thomas O. Enders, reiterated their support for Salvadoran elec-tions and condemned "all types of intervention in the internal affairs of the Central American coun-

While it did not mention Nicaragua by name, the statement also included a barely veiled attack on defense of the region against "totalitarian aggression" and rejecting the arms buildup in the area. "The only country embarked on an arms race in Central America is Nicaragua," El Salvador's foreign minis-ter, Fidel Chavez Mena, said.

Further, in an apparent criticism of Marxist philosophy as a whole, the declaration says that democracy requires that "civil and political rights of citizens enjoy the same importance and protection as economic and social rights."

American officials, although eager that the community should be perceived as a regional initiative, have privately conceded that the Reagan administration played an important role in encouraging for-mation of the community, which is in effect following the broad lines of U.S. policy toward Central America.

Beyond issuing public statements, it is still unclear what political expression the community will eventually take. Its call for addi-tional economic aid from abroad, for example, appears to duplicate the current negotiations under way between all six countries of the re-

In political terms, the associa-tion of the three countries has also complicated their relationship with their neighbors. Nicaragua has un-til now enjoyed warm relations with the outgoing Costa Rican government of President Rodrigo Carazo Odio, and it is eager to improve fies with the incoming Honduran administration of President Roberto Snazo Cordova. U.S. Senate Passes Anti-Busing Bill

WASHINGTON — The Senate approved legislation Thursday that would sharply restrict the authority of U.S. judges to order busing as a means of eliminating racial segregation in public schools.

An amendment sponsored by Sens. Bennett Johnston, Democrat of Louisiana, and Jesse Heims, Republican of North Carolina, was approved 58-38. The amendment would prohibit courts from ordering busing of students more than five miles or 15 minutes from their homes. Also, the Justice Department would be forbidden to seek a busing reme-

Israel Rebuffs Charges of Torture

GENEVA — Israel on Thursday rebuffed charges in a United Nations report of forture of Arab prisoners and said it was the only country that permitted prompt and regular visits by the Red Cross.

Bonn Indicates SS-20 Is Still Being Deployed

By John Vinocur New York Times Service

BONN — The West German government has indications that the Soviet Union is continuing to deploy SS-20 nuclear missiles aimed at Western Europe, an official source said Thursday.
The official, who requested anonymity, was responding to a statement Wednesday by Ottmar Schreiner, a Social Democratic parliamentarian, that Soviet officials had informed him the deployment had been halted.

Mr. Schreiner, who visited Mos-cow last week, said that Vadim V. Zagladin, first deputy chief of the international department of the Central Committee, told him deployment ended a few weeks ago and that the halt would continue for an unspecified time."

Mr. Schreiner interpreted the Soviet official's remark as meaning that the Soviet Union had begun moratorium whose continuation "was dependent on NATO's

In reply, the West German gov-ernment official said, "There is no indication that the SS-20 deployment program is halted. In fact, the indications are that it is not halted."

The official appeared eager to discredit Mr. Schreiner's report, which might affect public opinion in Western Europe, where there is substantial opposition to the Atlantie alliance's plan to counter the buildup of SS-20s with middle range U.S. missiles if current U.S. Soviet arms talks fail.

The official said that according to West German information there were 31 "deployment centers" for SS-20s in operation and that i appeared that a 32d was being In all, he said, 37 construction centers were earmarked to become "deployment centers." Thus, he said, only five or six centers apparently remain to be completed in the Russians present program.

As of January, the official said. 279 SS-20 launchers with a total of 840 warheads were counted.

In a speech Wednesday, Leonic I. Brezhnev, the Soviet leader, dic-not mention the report of a de-ployment halt. He accused the United States of not negotiating seriously at the talks on intermedi task was virtually impossible.

Mr. White, an outspoken critic of the Reagan administration poli-cy of support for the junta in El Salvador, said, however, that he had begun a practice of compiling weekly embassy statistics on victims of the Salvadoran conflict. The staff, Mr. White said, used newspaper reports, a weekly Roman Catholic Church tally reported at the archbishop's mass and the figures supplied by the archdiocesan human rights group. "While I thought the human rights group was biased toward the guerrillas," Mr. White said, "their counts seemed to be right." The Reagan administration, in collecting information on human rights in El Salvador, has discounted evi-dence supplied by the current ar-chdiocesan legal aid office, a successor to the human rights commission referred to by Mr. White.

The Council on Hemispheric Affairs, a private, left-of-center policy study group with offices in Washington and New York, has been conducting a study of the State Department human rights reporting procedures in four Latin American countries. According to Larry Birns, director of the council, opponents of U.S. policy in El Salvador are concerned that the reports have been "denatured" to suit administration interests which currently means not arousing public opinion any further. The reports are due to be released officially next week.

According to a high-ranking Defense Department official, the belief in the armed forces leadership that the American people would not tolerate U.S. military action in El Salvador has dampened Pentagon interest in involvement in the region. Mr. Haig, however, contin-ues to refuse to rule out any course of action, including a military out in Central America.

CIA Adopts Code of Conduct To Bar Private Use of Data

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The Central Intelligence Agency, responding to disclosures about the Libyan activries of former agents, has adopted a new code of conduct that prohibits the use of public office and inside information for private gain, according to agency officials and

The code, which was distributed within the agency in the last few days, says that employees of the agency enjoy a "special trust" and calls for them to maintain high standards of conduct "during and after" their government employment, the sources said.

The new standard for the first "time extends agency regulations to former employees, but the CIA is not able to enforce sanctions against such persons who violate the code, according to Dale Peter-son, an agency spokesman.

Closed Hearings Held

The code was presented Wednesday to members of the House Select Committee on Intelligence, which held closed hearings into the activities of two former agents, Edwin P. Wilson and Frank E. Terpil. Tape Reportedly Hints Pilots Knew of Wing Ice

By John Burgess and Douglas B. Feaver Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - The cockpit voice tape from the Air Florida jetliner that crashed into the Potomac River three weeks ago strongly suggests that the pilots took off even though they knew that ice or snow was oo the plane's wings, sources close to the investigation

Investigators have cautioned that cockpit voice tapes, which record sounds on a continuous 30minute loop, are subject to varying interpretation because the words are often terse, indistinct and spoken in conjunction with oods, gestures and other nonverbal commu-

Preliminary transcripts show that the pilot and co-pilot commented to each other repeatedly on the heavy snow falling on Jan. 13 as they taxied to the runway. Their words suggest that at one point they peered out cockpit win-dows specifically to check for ice or snow on their wings, coted that there was some, but took off anyway, a source said Wednesday.

About 30 seconds after takeoff, the plane crashed. Co-pilot Roger Alan Petut's final words were, "We're going down, Larry," ac-cording to a source, and pilot Lartion and its takeoff. A Braniff pilot who saw Flight 90 as it was taking off told them that it had snow or ice oo the wings and fuselage. As the plane sped down the ruo-way, the pilots' words indicate that they were concerned it was not accelerating fast enough One source said that preliminary electronic analysis of the jet whine, as recorded on the cockpit tape, indicates that the engines were giving out only about 80 percent of normal power. Another monitor-ing device recovered from the plane, the flight data recorder, has shown that it took 47 seconds to accelerate to takeoff speed instead of the normal 30 or so.

Seconds after liftoff, the 737's "stick shaker," a device that gives off a loud rattle to warn that the plane is about to stall — a fall due to insufficient lift - can be heard oo the tape, sources said. A source said the rattle began just after the plane reached 166 mph, 24 mph faster than the 737's oormal stall speed. That could support theories that ice or snow had reduced the wings' ability to generate lift, making the plane stall at a higher speed than oormal.

The plane's manufacturer, Boeing, has issued two bulletins to airlines operating the 737, warning that in icy cooditions the plane had shown a tendency to puch up suddenly shortly after takeoff. Investigators have speculated that the Air Florida plane did so, further complicating lift problems it may have been experiencing.

From Agency Dispatches
NEW YORK --- Antenor Patino 85, a Bolivian businessman-diplo-mat who was one of the world's richest men and heir to the tin mines founded by his father, died Tuesday. He had been under treatment for heart trouble. When his father died in 1947,

Mr. Patino inherited $1 billion. Mr. Patino held interests considered incalculable in shipping, mineral smelting and hotel firms worldwide. In 1899, Mr. Patino's mother, put leftist-nationalist Victor Paz Estenssoro into power, brought major social and economic changes. Most of the Patino wealth, however, had been transferred out of the country in 1951.

Before the 1952 uprising, Mr.

at one time chargé d'affaires in Madrid and was minister in Britain during World War II. Besides his extensive mining interests, Mr. Patino was known as a major art collector and held a law degree from the Sorbonne. He

Fortunate Finland

The remarkable point about Finland's election of a new president is how unremarkable it all seems. Mauno Koivisto, a Social Democrat, replaces the right-of-center Urho Kekkonen, Finland's president for 25 years. Moscow celebrates a "clear tilt to the left," but that dramatic interpretation has somehow eluded the new president. Koivisto talks of slogging forward in familiar paths.

Finland, a snowball's toss from Leningrad, seems certain to remain what it has been: a multiparty capitalist democracy, globally neutral but unquestionably independent.

On the periphery of the Soviet Union, that is a distinctive achievement — all the more notable because Finland once belonged to the czars and dared to make war against Stalin. Yet the Finns have not been swallowed up, like the Baltic republics, or bound hand and foot, like Poland. Why?

History explains a lot. Under the czars, from 1809 to 1917, Finland had autonomy as a constitutional monarchy in its own right. Once sovereign, it fought to remain so, escaping the Red Army's occupation with opportune territorial concessions. And since 1945, it has profited crucially from geography. Finland's other neighbor is Sweden, not East Germany, which means the Soviet Union does not need it, as it needs Poland, to protect vital military routes.

With great skill. Finns have made the most of these circumstances. They have nurtured political ties to Scandinavia and avoided excessive dependence on Soviet trade. Only a fifth of Finland's commerce flows east, a proportion that is carefully restrained. Finland's leaders have mollified Moscow without compromising Finnish self-respect - recognizing a Soviet interest in their politics but not tolerating improper meddling.

In recent times, the European power halance has left Finland space for maneuver. Those who envy Finland's apparently safe neutralism and think it a model for other democracies overlook an inconvenient fact: Helsinki can defend its independence precisely because West Germany and Italy have not been "Finlandized."

Curiously, Soviet ideologues also ignore the main lesson of Finland's status. Its democracy has not damaged Soviet security and its mixed economy requires no foreign subsidy. How different the Polish problem would appear if the Kremlin could tolerate such diversity "inside" its sphere. Koivisto, whom the Russians now welcome, was, like Lech Walesa, a seaport laborer. But he was free to pursue his vision as a democratic politician to become premier, head of the national hank, and now president.

The Martian's View

The man from Mars dropped into Earth orbit, just in time. He had heard that the first Reagan hudget was about to appear. What, he asked, was the focus of public attention?

There's intense speculation, we explained, about the size of the deficit and whether it could be held under $100 billion. The Martian consulted his notes. "Didn't you Americans once have a president who bent the budget into a pretzel to keep it under $100 hillion?"

Yes, indeed — but that was the whole budget, not just the deficit. Lyndon B. Johnson was a man who took large round numbers seriously. He spent the fall of 1964 gloomily predicting that the next budget couldn't possibly be kept under $100 billion. But when it came out in 1965, lo, the figure

The Martian wanted to know whether the number turned out to be accurate. We laughed, and explained that everyone knew it to be pretty fake from the beginning. In those days the trust funds, like Social Security, weren't counted in the totals — just as off-budget accounts aren't counted today. The real number wasn't $99.7 billion but $127 billion. Even that turned out to be a low turned out to have been $135 billion. "If everybody knew the number was bent," the man from Mars asked, "why did the president go to such lengths to produce it?" He kept asking questions like that. You could tell he was from Mars. "It makes people feel better," we patiently explained. "That's why Mr. Reagan is going to struggle so hard, and so publicly, to keep his deficit figures under $100 billion. It's a matter of paying respect to the proprieties, like the medicine man doing the rain dance. You may not get any rain, but everybody finds it gratifying to know that the poor fellow is doing everything humanly possible."

If Mr. Reagan's estimated budget deficit for 1983 should be, say, $99.7 billion, the Martian asked, how should one take that number?

With caution, we advised. One should make a few rough corrections, with a blunt pencil. First, one should add in the off-budget spending — currently about $20 billion a year. Then one should deduct all the savings from legislation that obviously won't pass. Mr. Reagan, for example, is already backing off his own plan to withhold taxes on interest and dividends. Then one should correct for the excessively optimistic economic forecasts on which all the other arithmetic is based. In a day or two, the Congressional Budget Office will publish a report telling everybody what a more realistic estimate might be.

If the budget office puts out a fairly reliable set of numbers, the Martian asked, why put out dif "That's politics," we said, "which would hardly interest a serious economist like you." "I'm not an economist," the Martian indignantly exclaimed. "I'm an anthropologist. I'm writing a book on the tribal habits of the smaller planets."

Death of a Nostrum

Laetrile, the alleged cancer cure made from apricot pits, may at long last be dead. A definitive new study, published in The New England Journal of Medicine, concludes that it "is a toxic drug that is not effective as a cancer treatment." After many premature announcements, this should prove to be Lae-

But what permitted this quack remedy to enjoy so vigorous a 30-year life span? The Laetrile saga has marked an alarmingly bitter divorce between the public and physicians. Despite the medical profession's repeated assurance that the drug is ineffective, it became a national cult.

Unable to obtain legal treatment in the United States, Americans would travel to Mexico and pay some $2,000 for a course of the apricot-pit nostrum. Probably tens of thousands of cancer patients tried the drug. Some 27 state legislatures bave legalized Lactrile, in an outright snuh to medical opinion and the Food and Drug Administration, which hanned it. A Harris poll found that the public favored legalization by a remarkable margin of 30 percent.

Those who peddled Laetrile traded on the desperation of cancer victims, for most of whom conventional medicine had nothing further to offer. But why did even these patients listen to the siren voices of false hope? Perhaps the U.S. government's "War on Cancer" raised unrealistic expectations. Medical spokesmen manifestly failed in their efforts to persuade the public that Laetrile was useless.

That failure of communication cannot be laid entirely at the public's door. Medical authorities were too slow to understand that the Laetrile case required something more than the usual scientific standards of evidence. For the public, it was not enough to poohpooh it on the basis of a few experiments.

Only in 1972 was a major test of the drug undertaken in animals at the Sloan-Kettering Institute. The evidence of efficacy was almost entirely negative, hut the few anomalously positive results - to be expected in any hiological study - allowed the Lastrilists to press their claims.

Physicians had long resisted testing Laetrile in patients because of the ethics of administering an almost certainly useless drug in place of proven remedies. But three years ago the National Cancer Institute agreed to mount a clinical trial.

Conducted just the way the Laetrilists recommended, with high doses of Laetrile and a special diet, the trial proves conclusively that the drug offers no benefit to patients with advanced cancer. It also shows that the cyanide-laden remedy is dangerously toxic at the recommended level.

Not every quack remedy should be dignified with a full-fledged clinical trial. Laetrile was different. It had a predecessor in Krebiozen, another anti-cancer remedy with a pseudoscientific rationale. Because of the continuing intractability of cancer, Laetrile will doubtless be resurrected in a new form. Physicians should not again wait for 27 state legislatures to tell them of a crisis of public confidence in scientific medicine. The next time around, they should start sooner to reason with the desperate.

1907: Ships From Germany

BERLIN - One of the most significant signs of Germany's development and industrial progress can be found in the extraordinary increase in shipbuilding that has taken place within her yards during the last few years. Twenty years ago almost all ships, merchantmen, men-of-war or otherwise, sailing under the German flag were constructed in foreign or English yards. Today Germany not only covers her own requirements but is commencing to build all kinds of vessels for other nations. In no year has the progress been more evident than during the last one, 1906, when 377 steamships and 390 sailing vessels were built in the 71 existing shipyards of

1932: Invasion of Shanghai

PARIS - Today's editorial in the Herald reads: "The purpose of Japan at Shanghai is different from her purpose in invading Manchuria. Manchuria is a granary larger than Texas, a reservoir of raw materials without which the forge and factories of Japan would shut down. The very existence of overpopulated, industrial Japan depends upon an untrammeled highway to the beart of Manchuria's resources. Behind Japan's attack on Shanghai is now her need of raw materials, but her no less imperious need of a market for her fabricated wares. The Yangtze valley, which shelters one-eighth of the population of the globe, offers a condensed, homogeneous, easily reached mass of rural consumers."

Other Tongues for Americans: The Key Is Linguistic Zest

PARIS — There are countries in the world where language is the most divisive political issue. Belgium and Canada are racked by the argument, which reflects real rivalry for economic and social benefits.

In parts of the United States the problem is reaching similar proportions. Some demographers predict it won't be long before it's nationwide. The time for a sensible approach is before it starts tearing at the country's unity.

There seems to be a good deal more pub-lic awareness of most Americans' poverty in the resource of foreign language, and sometimes even their own, than appears on the surface. In November, 1979, when the President's Commission on Foreign Language and International Studies presented its findings, it concluded, "Nothing less is at issue than the nation's security." It bemoaned "the complacent and defeatist attitude" of officialdom toward the nation's linguistic shortcomings. "Americans' incompetence in foreign languages is nothing short of scan-dalous, and it is becoming worse," the com-mission said. Then one more report was

It is not surprising that, at a time of sharp budget cuts that are going to affect many aspects of education and culture, support for language study is languishing. But the problem isn't just mocey, it's attitudes.

That shows in the conflict over "bilingualism" in areas with large Spanish-speaking populations. The term is turned on its bead. Instead of the real meaning of fluency in two languages, it has come to be used as a suphemism for sticking to one's mother

It should be obvious nonsense to imagine that anybody gains when people cannot un-derstand each other. Babel didn't collapse because the workers couldn't communicate but because they didn't try to learn.

Ciregory Jaynes once reported in The New York Times with delicious satiric insight about the quarrels of Western intelligence agents dumped in a dilapidated town in Cameroon, ostensibly to watch the fighting across the river in Chad when Libyan troops took over. The Americans, be said, went about proclaiming that anybody in the world could understand English if it was shouted loudly enough.

The syndrome is widespread, and unat-tractive. English is the dominant and official language of the United States, and of course every American needs to know it. Lack of ease in using it not only condemns people to second-class citizenship, with all that that implies in terms of jobs, standing, access to the culture. It also weakens the sense of narional identity and the sharing of values to which the country is dedicated

But there is no reason that requiring basic education to be in English should exclude English-speaking Americans from other languages. Where a second language is widely used, as Spanish is in Florida and the Southwest, the shattered feeling of community would be immensely improved if all the other pupils were required to study Spanish. That would be more like bilingualism.

The emphasis of those who do urge the value of breaking out of the single-language mind-box is mostly on utility. The 1979 commission report stressed the need for lan-guage ability in defense, business abroad, foreign relations and research. True, these things are important. But it's a mistake to think languages are only good for certain careers and travel.

They are tools for enriching everyday life, as music, hobbies, sports add zest to hundrum existence. They open the door to enjoyment of humor, legend, drama, food, the wisdom of tradition, from another point of tradition, and hobbies and the state of t view, and therefore help broaden and brighten the mind.

Refusal to accept anybody else's language as worth knowing reflects the same narrow-gauge kind of head, the same subborn igno-rance, as that of the fuodamentalist I heard about who denounced people speaking in other tongues, saying. "If English was good enough for Jesus Christ, it's good enough for them." The story is apocryphal in bottle senses.

Certainly, nobody can ever learn all the languages of the world. There are thousands. This argument against trying a few stems from considering only the immediate professional utility of multilingualism. It leaves out the fun and fantasy of having more than one track to think along.

And that is mainly what is wrong with the way Americans are taught foreign lan-guages, as though they were computer pro-grams. Along with the infinitives and sub-juctives — maybe even before — should come the attractions. Perhaps a better way to start learning French is with a menu and recipes, German with an account of a soccer game, anything with news about familiar

Confused Foreign Policy And Reagan's 'Viability'

By William F. Buckley Jr.

TEW YORK — John Kenneth Galbraith was once asked, "Who do you favor for president?" and answered, "The leftwardmost viable candidate." An honest answer, to which the obvious complement is, "The rightwardmost viable candidate." The operative word, in dealing with either "left" or "right," is "viable." And the question to ask about Mr. Reagan, therefore, is whether be might "viably" act more "conservatively" than be has done.

In domestic policy he has oot, in the opinion of some of us, gone as far as he might have there we mean that he has not gone as far as he might have the probably.

have. Here we mean that he has not gone as far as he might have rhetorically. Probably he got from Congress everything he could conceivably have got from it. Indeed, at one point, before the critical vote in the House on the tax bill, Mr. Reagan and his advisers calculated that they would lose by two votes. He stands especially to suffer from the Stockman Syndrome, here defined as: "Privately I know that it isn't going to work." If Mr. Reagan had asked, let us say, for a reduction in the marginal tax rate to a for a reduction in the marginal tax rate to a maximum of 25 percent, he could ascribe any shortfall in future economic deficits to the difference between what he asked for and what he got.

It is in the field of foreign policy that he gives a perplexing image. Primarily, Mr. Reagan is a magnetic field. His stands, so long and skillfully articulated, are unambiguous as to concept, flexible in the matter of execution. But in the field of foreign policy there is genuine confusion. It is not surprising that his critics trot out so voluptuously statements of his, made during the past, that would appear to apply to the kind of thing he is now charged with doing, most specifically in the failure adequately to meet the challenge of the suppression of Poland.

Consider the matter of credits. Specifically consider the matter of International Harly, consider the matter of International Harvester and the matter of grain.

Arguments have been made, with special force from stockholders of International mined to impose maximum pressure on the Soviet Union, avoiding the alternative of military engagement at almost any cost. The military arm of the United States, which eats up that $150 billion every year, is no more important than the far less expensive paramilitary resources of the United States. These are: the economic weapon (we are, relatively, rich; the Soviet Union is poor, and might be made desperately poor) and the psychological weapon (our people are relatively free, theirs are enslaved). Any failure to use the paramilitary resources to the fullest extent not only increases the expense of the whole defensive enterprise but, paradoxically, increases the possibility that a final engagement would oeed to be mili-tary, rather than dialectical.

Mr. Reagan must not appear inflexible, nor be inflexible. But he must appear to be a stalwart presence, the locus of anti-Communist thought and action.

Negotiations Should Precede Elections in El Salvador

THE PLAN to hold an election next month in El Salvador, while not the direct cause of the country's current problems, is certainly one of the contributing factors. As a participant in the Octo-ber, 1979, coup and as a former member of the governing junta, I believe that the election should not be held, that negotiations between all representative forces in the country take place first.

No election held in a climate of violence, with limited participation and little if any discussion of issues, can accomplish a legitimate peace in El Salvador. Negotiations would reveal the true obstacles and deep problems that are preventing peace, and thus would establish a framework for what must be done to reconcile El Salvador's society. Although social injustice is at the population, from the professional sector to the political resistance movements to the nonconformist fringe.

The magnitude of El Salvador's problems indicates that the present government lacks both a base to sustain itself and the possibility of having its programs accepted by having its programs accepted by the people. The government has exhausted all political possibilities of resolving the problems by cut-ting off dialogue with the opposi-tion and negating the participation of other sectors in the government. Above all, the junta's efforts will fail because it has lost all credibili-ty and authority by masking or ty and authority by masking or failing to cope with gross human rights violations.

Negotiations would allow these problems to be brought into the open, where they might be dealt with. Whatever solution might be reached, it must respect the integrity of the military forces that demonstrated the spirit of justice by supporting the coup two years ago. On Oct. 15, 1979, when the present civilian-military government was installed, the leaders of the coup issued a proclamation that attempted to synthesize the primary aspirations of our countrymen. As we stated, the coup's general objective was to correct the imbalance and inequities within a frame-work of mutual understanding among all sectors of Salvadoran ly fear that the coming Senate society.

Those of us in uniform aspired to disengage the military from all partisan politics and to play a new role, that of a professional armed force to protect and defend our country. This new role would merit the respect and appreciation of our fellow citizens, and would prevent our being used by any party or group for its own interests.

Since then, the balance has shifted and power is beld entirely by a small group. These people are re-sponsible for taking our nation into a wider, more perilous arena of conflict, pitting the military against their countrymen. This has compromised national and military prestige and endangered the very future of the armed forces, for a population that bas suffered under a corrupt military may decide to do away with it entirely.

W warning signal has been flashed to President Reagan that defense-oriented senators, many of them solid Reaganites, will break their self-imposed silence and de-mand decisive U.S. action against the Soviet arms buildup in Cuba, using a political backdrop that could embarrass the president.

That backdrop is the drama of President John F. Kannedy's spectacular success in backing down the Soviet Union in the 1962 Cu-ban missile crisis. What gives piquancy to the demand for action is the new disclosure that Cuban airfields now operate as a base for the Soviet TU-95 heavy bomber called the Bear — far superior to the IL-28 that Kennedy insisted be with-

Despite the rising demand for action by an administration that has been talking tough on Cuba and the Caribbean for a full year, but carrying a small stick, the con-sensus within Reagan's national security bureaucracy was described to us this way: "We all agree the Soviets are developing a fantastic strategic opportunity."
But as for the U.S. counteraction, well, let's see what happens. That is the cycle of mertia that Senate critics are out to break, and they hope that focusing on the Kennedy performance will help.

The Senate foreign relations subcommittee that oversees Latin America and the Caribbean has asked State Department officials to give it details and documents of the 1962 agreements (that resolved the missile crisis) between John J. McCloy, representing the United States, and Vassily Kuznetsov, then a high-ranking official in the Soviet Foreign Office.

The subcommittee, headed by Sen. Jesse Helms, the hard-line conservative leader, means busi-oess, but the State Department is exhibiting signs of wariness, Senate insiders say the administration does not want to reveal the fine print of the written and oral un-dertakings by the Soviets in the socalled "McCloy-Kuznetsov agreements." A closed-door session scheduled for this week was postponed for at least another week. Rising Senate agitation is based on the suspicion, now nearing con-viction, that the McCloy-Kuznetsov agreements have been torn to shreds by Moscow. The essence of those agreements was an embargo on "offensive" weapons in Cuba that could be used either against the United States or in Cuban po-

Chinese, Vietnamese Again Become Testy On Border Incidents

By Christopher S. Wren New York Times Service

PEKING - A series of border incidents during the Lunar New Year holiday last month has prompted new recriminations between China and Vietnam, which have been on hostile terms since their border war three years ago.

The newspaper People's Daily accused Hanoi Wednesday of hypocrisy in proposing a cease-fire oo three recent occasions and then allegedly instigating 44 "military provocations" during the 10-day holiday that the Chinese call Chunjie and the Vietnamese call

Tet.
. The article by Ji Ying of the official Chinese press agency said that one Chinese peasant was killed and two were wounded along the rugged border of the southern provinces of Yunnan and Guangxi between Jan. 18 and 28. The Vietnamese authorities never tire of talking about their de-

Mr. Pérez de Cuellar assured Pham Van Dong, the Viet-namese premier, that he was ready to help "contribute to a peaceful

The proposed intervention of bined with Vietnam's public truce offers to put China on the defen-sive. People's Daily took note of the Vietnamese proposals on Dec. 28, Jan. 14 and Jan. 30 and alleged that Vietnam had circulated them at the United Nations "in an attempt to achieve maximum benefit from this propaganda stunt."

China told Vietnam in September that there could be no negotia-tions before Vietnamese forces pulled out of Cambodia. The Chinese have also cootended that a truce is superfluous because the Vietnamese alone are to blame for the border hostilities.

"As long as Vietnam refrains from making any future military provocations or incursions into Chinese territory, the question of fighting back simply will not arise and peace and tranquility will pre-vail in the border area, festival or no festival," People's Daily said Wednesday.

While it is almost impossible to determine who is at fault from the verbal attacks and counterattacks, the Chinese appear to have found the border a coovenient point of pressure on Vietnam while Hanoi is trying to buttress a client regime Phnom Penh. According to Western intelligence reports last year, the Chinese were tying down up to two-thirds of the Vietnamese Army that might otherwise have been available for duty in Cambo-

Pol Pot But some diplomats say that Vietnam, realizing that China does oot want to talk, may find it advantageous to press publicly for a truce while embarrassing the Chi-

On Jan. 25, the Chinese say, Vietnamese fired at and broke up a holiday celebration in the Guangxi town of Congxin and also fired into the Hekon area for three hours. The next day, the Chinese said, two civilians in Yunnan were wounded by Vietnamese mines.

The Vietnamese had previously alleged that Chinese troops fired across the border or intruded into Vietnamese territory on more than a dozen occasions between Dec. 28

Last mooth, the Chinese press buttressed Peking's claim with a lengthy historical study showing that the Chinese had been there first. Vietnam responded by publishing a "white paper" and a long magazine article supporting its claim to the islands.

General Says Rapid Improvement Is Needed If Chinese Army Is to Avoid Defeat in Future

"If we fail to upgrade the organization and discipline of the armed forces, we would not be able to engage an enemy in modern warfare and may have to pay a much high-er price in the event of an emergency," said Gen. Yang Dezhi, chief of staff of the People's Liber-

These measures included military academies to train officers, a system of ranks to strengthen the command structure and discipline, new armaments such as surface-tosurface missiles and anti-tank systems and a scale of military pay and benefits for each rank.

But such ideas ran counter to Mao's emphasis on guerrilla war-fare and thus were not politically acceptable. Gen. Peng was purged by Mao in 1959 and was replaced as defense minister by Marshal Lin Piao, who scrapped most of the "regularization program," calling it "bourgeois militarism."

In the 1960s, Marshal Lin rose to become one of the principal radical leaders of the Cultural Revolution — until he died in a plane crash after an abortive coup. Gen. Yang said that military ex-

Mrs. Zhang said that getting rid of leftist influence was one of the main problems facing the party, and she accused many members of using their positions for personal

She said the problem to a large extent arose because the party, which oow has 39 million members, had doubled in size during the Cultural Revolution of 1966-1976, when the radicals were in control.

A campaign against bureaucracy was started Dec. 1, when Premier Zhao Ziyang declared war against practices such as overmanning. The campaign is now being linked with attacks on remaining leftist influence, which has declined steadily since the downfall of the "Gang of Four" in 1976.

IRA Political Arm Names 5 to Run In Irish Elections

DUBLIN — The political arm of the IRA, the Provisional Sinn Fein, has named five candidates incloding a man in prison in Bel-fast — to contest the Irish general elections Feb. 18. Sinn Fein said, however, that if any candidates are successful, they would perform constituency duties but not take their seats.

The vote will be the first electoral test of support for the Provision-Sim Fein. The party's president, Rory O'Brady, said four more names were being considered for nomination.

The five candidates named Wednesday have strong ties with the constituencies they will contest in the Irish Republic. One of them, Seamus McElwaine, is awaiting trial in Belfast on charges of murdering a part-time soldier.

Sinn Fein's decision to enter political races followed last year's election victories here hy two IRA prisoners in Northern Ireland during the hunger strike campaign to press for political status in prison.

The general election is being called because of the defeat last week of Garret FitzGerald's sevenmonth-old, center-left government on its budget plans.

Ukrainians Caught

Western experts said the penalties for diverting bread to livestock also reflect low prices for bread and high prices charged to farm workers for feed grain. The combination of shortages and a distorted pricing system unintentionally encourages rural black markets.

The authorities are trying to stem the diversion of bread to pigs and other livestock by limiting individual purchases to two kilograms (4.4 pounds) or about four loaves, but evidently with only mixed success.

The Pravda article listed several cases in which Ukrainian villagers had been caught feeding bread to their animals. In other instances, sales cierks at rural stores were convicted of selling sacks of cereal grains meant for portidge to villags who paid them bribes and then fed the grain to livestock.

TOWNSVILLE, Australia Headlines such as "Starfish Plague Returns" and "Starving Millions Are Eating the Great Barrier Reef" have sounded the alarm Once again here on Australia's hungry armies again turning verdant patches of tropical reef into watery moonscapes, just as they did in the 1960s and early 1970s. But this time marine scientists

Panic followed the discovery in those early days that major infesta-

Not any more. The Crown of Thorns is gaining a new image. Its attacks are as destructive as ever, but some marine scientists are defending it as a creature periodically deputized by nature to destroy > coral reefs in order to save them. Other scientists are not yet prepared to go that far, but their reearch over the last decade has established, to the satisfaction of most of them, that the plagues are not new and they have occurred periodically for centuries; that they are probably more likely to be caused by weather or other natural phenomena rather than by man, although human disturbances may serve to increase the severity or frequency of plagues, and that de-stroyed reefs tend to regenerate far more quickly than was believed.

Beneficial Effects

Dr. William A. Newman, of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography in La Jolla, Calif., is among those who compare Crown of Thorns outbreaks to beneficial forest fires. They believe that in eating away the living surface of a reef, they create space for different young species of coral and other imals to get established.

Citing studies by Robert T. Paine, a specialist on predators at the University of Washington, and others, Newman said: "We think this predator is required to maintain the high species diversity of the ecosystem." In diversity, he dded, there is strength. Researchers have found that in the competition for space to live and grow on a reef, bigger and stronger species of coral tend to monopolize. Smaller, rarer species cannot get a start or get pushed out. Catastrophic disturbances, such as a starfish plague or a hurricane, serve as a kind of subsea antitrust law, re-establishing competition for more species.

But that does not make the Crown of Thorns, scientifically named Acanthaster planci, much easier to like. Its 16 arms are covered with sharp, poisonous spines and it has repugnant table manners: It coughs up its stomach, smothers its meal in digestive nices, and sharps up the mixture. It performs this gastronomic feat, called stomach eversion, on the tiny animal polyps of hard about 24 inches in diameter and can eat away about two square feet brace growth rates showing that of the fleshy polyps a day, leaving nothing but hard outer skeletons.

Scientists think normal starfish population density on a balanced reef is about six to 12 per square mile. But in a plague, starfish hy the thousands eat across an average reef at a rate of perhaps half a mile a month, turning one of the planet's most productive ecosystems into a pile of underwater rubble. Fish and other mobile reef dwellers quickly vacate.

For the millions of tropical islanders who depend on reefs for food, income and protection from open seas, this is not an act of endearment. Many fear that their fishing grounds, tourist industries and, perhaps, even their coastal homes could be eroded in the aftermath of starfish binges.

Coral reefs need a veneer of constantly huilding animal life. Without it, the remaining limestone skeletons are subject to erosion and dissolution through wave and current action. It is this edifice of skeletons, with their frosting of coral life, that shields tropical islands and coastlines from the open ocean's destructive forces.

"I happen to think reefs are fairnt," said David J. Barnes, a specialist in coral metabolism with the Australian Institute of Marine Science, near Townsville.
"But this starfish is very efficient. I can't think of a more thorough way to denude a reef with the possible exception of using nuclear weapons.

Productive Survivors

Reefs, however, have proved to be survivors. "By productive, we mean that a coral reef is able to channel at least as much, and probably more, of the energy of smlight into living tissues than any other system in the world certainly as much as sugarcane. which is probably as productive as ssisted crop can be," said Roger Bradbury, a marine ecologist at the Australian institute.

"By diverse, we mean it has millions of creatures doing things. If a prairie is like a small town with a general store and a gas station, a coral reef is like New York Cityit's switched on, it's going all the time. People used to associate this kind of frenetic activity with instability — one major disturbance and the whole system crashes. But these things don't appear to be that way. There seems to be an intrinsic stability," be added.

"People also tend to associate said. "But now we have very good data from using radioisotopes to reefs in general grow on the order of something like 10 times faster than we used to think they did."

The Crown of Thorns hit the reefs around Green Island in the mid-'60s," said Peter F. Sale, a marine biologist at the University of Sydney, referring to an island resort in northeast Queensland. "By the mid-70s, they had grown back to the point where if you had not known, you could not tell it had

The ocean water around coral reefs is a thick soup of microscopic creatures, including the larvae of coral polyps and Crown of Thorns starfish. Currents can carry them miles. Those not consumed by larger reef animals eventually find places to live and grow. For coral larvae, a reef laid bare hy startish soon becomes a new community.

On older reefs, this is much more difficult. They are crowded, and when the bigger, healthier species need space to grow, they take it by pushing smaller, weaker spe-cies out. Major disturbances tend to reverse this trend.

Human Impact Noted

Scientists continue to debate what sets off a Crown of Thorns plague. Each female starfish lays millions of eggs, but normally far less than 1 percent survive. What increases this survival rate?

"More often than not, when you find a starfish outbreak, there is some kind of man-type impact around," Bradbury said. "So the reasonable question now is whether man's activities increase the frequency of the plagues." Dr. Robert Endean, at the University of Queensland in Brisbane. argues that man has increased the survival rate by depleting the star-fish's predators. Stocks of several species of groupers, which eat young startish, have been lowered by fishermen. Another starfish eater, the triton, a gastropod mol-lusk, lives in a shell prized by collectors. The giant clam, a filter feeder on various types of larvae, has been severely depleted from reefs in much of Asia by priste

Taiwanese clamming boats. Other scientists argue that intensive agriculture upriver from the reefs has greatly increased the runoff of nutrients that help starfish larvae survive.

Newman, of Scripps, said he believed the outbreaks might occur both with and without man's help. inst as forest fires do.

Sounds to Convincingly Lie By

By David Larsen Los Angeles Times Service

L OS ANGELES — "Honey," the phone caller tells his wife or husband, "I'll be a little late tonight. I'm caught in the middle of a cattle stock-

And lest the person on the other end should suspect otherwise, what comes over the phone in the background hut the noise of thundering hoofs and гансоня тоок.

If the party being called thinks that is a lot of bull, then why not try the excuse of being in church. How could that be doubted?

"It is our most popular sound effect," Mason Zelazny boasted. "Comes complete with organ music and the murmur of a congregation." What hath Zelazny wrought?

It is known as "What's Your Excuse?" and the other day the Palomino Club here, that shrine of country-western achievements, became the first place in California to have such a booth. Indeed, for whatever it is worth, this is only the second one in the entire nation.

The name Zelazny seems to be consistent with creativity. A little more than two years ago, one For the next time you call Stan Zelazny, along with a buddy, obtained a patto say you'll be late and need ent on a talking tomba believable excuse, an His namesake (no relation) said in an interview automated telephone booth that the idea for his excuse brainchild came a year ago while be was on a business flight to Miwith background effects plain to someone why yon are going to be late for an appointment to be some place else," the inventor said. "We considered starting an excuse answering service, having someone say she is your mother and that you have come down with the flu.

That led to a more practical concept, an automated telephone booth that would allow the caller to suggest that he or she is in any of 15 different

The first problem was a booth," Zelasny re-called. "The phone company told us they weren't making any anymore."

He and some Texas friends headed for a construction site and began taking measurements with a tape at one of those outdoor portable toilets.

There was an elderly worker inside and he started yelling. He wanted to know if we planned to tie up the thing and kidnap him."

But shortly thereafter, inside a garage, emerged a wooden prototype to take its place alongside the other great advances in civilization, like the square cee maker.

All that remained was creating the various sounds, most of which were supplied by a studio in Newport Beach, Celif.

Just as in Billy Bob's Texas in Fort Worth, where the original booth was installed, the one at the end of the bar at the Palomino is activated by the user inserting a dollar hill for two minutes of background accompaniment. Following directions inside the 8-foot carpeted. soundproof stall, the user punches a button to make his selection, places the phone call, and then presses a "start" button to begin the excuse recital.

"After you make the selection you have 10 free seconds during which to change your mind," the originator said. "In case you suddenly decide, 'She'll never believe that.'"

While the structure is occupied, a lighted sign outside it proclaims: "Excuse in Use." One of the most selected choices is the old I'm at-the-auto-shop-ploy. That comes complete with a background of engines being revved, hammering of metal, a mechanic swearing at his help.

Or consider the still-at-the-airport stratagem. With this one you get departures and arrivals being announced, passengers being paged.
"You can even control volume, so that the sound of a jet roaring overhead is deafening." Zelazny explained.

The volume control is also useful during the rainstorm effect, to indicate how foolbardy it would be to venture out during such a downpour (with claps of thunder for

One of our excuses the police station sounds - worked very effectively for a couple of college students," the inventor said. "They called home with it to say they were in fail. Their families wired them each $100."

Many of the ideas for sounds came from Zelazny's wife. Sherri, who he said has had firsthand experience with some of the excuses.

Their current phone-connected sound effects include those of a war, complete with gunfire, explosions, air-raid sirens. These days, what with all the tension in the world, who is to doubt that the caller does not happen to be caught in one?

Also available to the caller are tapes of a hospital waiting room, restaurant, night in the jungle, nursery, traffic jam, department store, office—and even total silence.

More Effects Planned

In the planning stage, said the 31-year-old Zelazny, is the addition of such excuses as being at a beauty salon, bowling alley, laundromat, mas-

The sounds so far are doing well enough.

"We had one guy at the Texas club who had phoned his mother-in-law with an alibi, supported an appropriate hackground, to relay to his e," the inventor said.

Fujitsu Will Supply Large Computers to Siemens

TOKYO - Fujitsu said Thursday that it has received orders to supply several M-380 large frame computers to Siemens, the West German electronics company, early next year. This is the first overseas order for the model, it said. Fujitsu declined to disclose the contract value but said the domestic market price is about two billion yen ($8.9 million) a unit.

Fujitsu said it has also concluded the contracts with Britain's International Computers Ltd. and Amdahl of the United States for M-380 computers. Industry sources said Fujitsu plans to increase exports of large computers to cover part of the development costs.

W. German Bank Provides for Polish Risk

FRANKFURT — Bank für Gemeinwirtschaft will make risk provisions for its Polish loans and has sufficient reserves in various forms to cover all of its exposure to Poland, management board spokesman Thomas Wegscheider told a press conference Thursday.

Neither he nor management board member Diether Hoffmann would give the exact size of the bank's Polish exposure, but Mr. Hoffmann said it does not exceed 900 million Deutsche marks. He declined to specify the degree to which the bank will try in its 1981 accounts to offset Polish exposure with special risk provisions, saying that to offset Polish loans 100 percent would be foolish.

Ricoh Watch Reports Loss for Latest Year

TOKYO — Ricoh Watch reported on Thursday a net loss of 2.18 billion yen for the business year ending Nov. 30 1981, compared with a 250 million yen profit a year earlier.

Securities analysts later said the poor performance of the watch company is likely to trim the consolidated net income of the Ricoh Group. They estimated the group's consolidated net will be 14.50 billion yen in the year ending March 31, 1982, down 11 percent from 16.26 billion a DUSSELDORF — Thyssen plans to raise approximately 500 million Deutsche marks in the near future by means of a possible one-for-five rights issue at about 90 DM a share, managing board chairman Dieter Spethmann said Thursday.

He told the annual news conference that he was unable to say when this capital increase will take place but that its timing will depend on the value of the company's shares on West German stock exchanges.

The company's present share capital totals 1.30 billion DM or 25.97 million 50-DM ordinary shares. A one-for-five issue at 90 marks would yield 467.52 million DM.

BUSINESS NEWS BRIEFS Intel Sees Japanese Operation As Spark for Future Growth

By Steve Lohr New York Times Service

TSUKUBA, Japan — By the look of it, a slice of California's Silicon Valley has been transplanted here, 40 miles northeast of Toyo. The modern low-slung building, the chesthigh beige partitions that divide office space inside, even the landscaping, are similar to the Santa Clara, Calif., headquarters of Intel Corp., a leading U.S. semiconductor maker.

The Intel building, opened two months ago, is part of the big push that U.S. semiconductor producers are making into Japan. Companies are opening offices, expanding existing opera-tions and making commitments to produce in

The drive comes at a time when the U.S. semiconductor industry is suffering a steep de-cline in profitability brought on by the reces-sion in the United States and strong competition from its Japanese rivals such as Nippon Electric, Hitachi and Fujitsu. Particularly inksome to the U.S. industry, long regarded as a model of competitive vigor, has been the recent Japanese triumph in a key segment of the business, large-scale memory chips, which store data.

"We've really seen the shift in leadership from the U.S. to Japan in semiconductor memories," said Benjamin A. Rosen, president of Rosen Research and an electronics industry analyst based in New York.

For example, Intel currently employs 150 workers in Japan, compared with six when Mr. Kamo opened a sales office here in 1975. The Mills opened a sales office late workers, and Mr. Kamo said it was likely that the company would grow beyond that within four years.

The new facility houses engineers who design semiconductor devices, as well as market-ing, sales and support staff. Although Intel is not yet manufacturing in Japan, industry analysts speculate that it probably will begin soon.
"We're thinking about it, but we have oo firm plans at this time," Mr. Kamo said.

Major Steel Works Set Merger in W. Germany

By John Tagliabue New York Times Service

BONN - Two of West Germany's largest steel companies agreed Thursday to merge their steelmaking activities in a new joint venture that will form Western Europe's second largest steel company.

Krupp Stahl and Krupp
Südwestfalen, steel making divisions of Fried Krupp, and EstelHoesch Werke, the West German arm of the Dutch-West German steel company, Estel, announced in a joint statement their intention to merge their steelmaking, steel finishing and other activities in a new company in which Krupp Stahl and Estel-Hoesch will hold equal shares.

The planned combination, which has been given the provisional name Ruhrstahl, will have deep effects on Western Europe's steel industry. The company would be Europe's second biggest steel company, with a crude steel production of roughly 9 million metric tons, and yearly sales of about $5 billion to $6 billion. The largest steel maker is West Germany's steel maker is West Germany's Thyssen, which last year turned out 11.1 million tons.

The original idea underlying the link between Hoesch and the

According to the agreement reached Thursday, further cuts in the steel making capacity of the companies is foreseen, largely affecting Estel-Hoesch, where crude steel capacity will drop from roughly 5 million tons in 1981 to 3,5 million tons.

Particularly affected will be Hoesch in Dortmund, where reductions in capacity and modern-ization are expected to cut about 13,000 of 24,000 jobs.

NYSE Prices Close Mixed

From Agency Disputches
NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange closed mixed Thursday as blue chip issues outperformed the rest of the market, which continued to be dominated by concerns about the direction of interest rates.

The Dow Jones industrial average dropped more than six points at one point but a late rally caused it to close at 847.03, up 2.00 points. All other indices were lower, however, and declines led advances by a 3-to-2 margin. Volume rose to 53.3 million shares from the 49.6 million traded Wednes-

Analysts said investors are concerned that large deficits will require the government to step up its financing requirements, placing upward pressure on interest rates.

The administration had projected the deficit would reach $90 billion this year and then decline in 1983. But CBO Director Alice Rivlin told a congressional hearing that the military buildup is producing large deficits.

Analysts said buyers may have re-entered the market late in the day when a $2.5 billion Treasury auction of 20-year bonds was com-

Fritz Lentwiler, president of the Swiss National Bank and chairman of the Bank for International Settlements, said the world economy already had high inflation and very high interest rates, and if the uncertainty of rapidly fluctuating exchange rates was added there was a risk it would break down.

The presence of the U.S. Federal Reserve in the exchange market would have the utmost psychological importance. Without it, the market has the feeling nobody really cares," he told a European agement symposium.

Central bankers from Japan and Italy, Reiichi Shimamoto and Lamberto Dini, took a similar line, saying that concerted actions in to bring down its own inflation by the past, such as in 1978 when the dollar was very weak, had been a means of its tight monetary policy, he said.

Gain for Japan Of 10% Seen by Mitsubishi Chief

TOKYO — Japanese exports this year could rise about 10 percent from last year when they rose 17.9 percent to $149,38 billion on an fob basis, president of Mitsubishi Corp., Yohe Mimura said Thursday.

He told reporters however, much depends on the yen exchange rate, but said he hopes it will strengthen in the latter part of this year. He also predicted Japanese vehicle exports, Japan's biggest single export item, will stay the same in 1982 as last year at 6.05 million, when they increased 1.3 percent over 1980.

Commenting on current trade issues, Mr. Mimura said the problem over so-called nontariff barriers, 67 of which the government said last week it would drop, has been that Japanese inspectors and customs officials take the regulations too much to the letter. He said unless this changes the problem over non-tariff barriers is bound to persist.

unless this changes the problem over non-tariff barriers is bound to persist.

Regarding future trends of Japan's sogo shosha or general trading houses. Mr. Mimura said these companies will have to place more emphasis on business in the Third World as Japanese exports are hampered by the economic slowdown to industrialized countries; and by trade friction, while domestic business will probably decline.

Mitsubishi is the largest of the nine_soga shosha in Japan which together in fiscal 1980. April to March, accounted for $334 billion worth of transactions, equivalent to 30 percent of Japanese GNP.

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Advertising agencies may appear as homespun enterprises to the U.S. public, but they contain a strong international streak. In fact, "international" is literally the last word in the name of such publicly owned companies as Ogilvy & Mather, BBDO and Doyle Dane Bernbach.

The sense of global endeavor is also apparent in other corporate names. There is, for example, the Interpublic Group, the world's largest ad agency, and the JWT Group, which owns the J. Walter Thompson agency. There is a say-ing in the advertising business that "JWT colonized South America shortly after Columbus."

Finally, among the large, public-ly held agencies, there is Foote, Cone & Belding Communications, whose billings are also worldwide.

The global reach of these companies makes good sense, according to Alan J. Gottesman, an industry analyst at the brokerage firm of L.F. Rothschild, Unterberg, Towbin. "As an agency, you follow clients like Coca-Cola and General Motors overseas," he explained. "It's just the natural, evolutionary thing to do."

But this worldwide advertising activity affected the bottom-line profits of agencies adversely in 1981. With the strength of the dollar, foreign currency translation losses cut into the companies' profit. In advertising circles, they call it "an unpredictable event."

But Mr. Gottesman said that recent changes in accounting practic-es "should ameliorate the impact of foreign currency translations on reported profits in 1982."

Currently, he rates advertising issues as "relatively cheap." The analyst added: "Their earnings prospects don't justify such a downcast appraisal in the stock market. And, looking out over the Domestic automakers said they sold 368,138 cars in January com-pared with 469,832 cars sold in the 1981 month. Because there was an additional selling day in January last year, the percentage comparison is based on the rate of sales per

EEC Sees No Conflict In French Programs

BRUSSELS — EEC Commission experts have ruled that French plans to restructure several industrial sectors to raise the competitiveness of domestic producers and reduce import penetration do not in principle conflict with EEC regulations, commission sources said Thursday.

The experts examined the plans for the textile, leather, domestic appliance, furniture and toy indus-tries following complaints from other EEC governments that they seemed to be in breach of EEC trade rules. They said further study of financial aid to the sectors concerned was necessary to make sure it conformed with EEC competi-

THE ROLE of storyteller suits Joseph Alson. He knows how to make even oft-repeated history lively — with practiced twists and fillips, the embellishments of hindsight and suspenseful pauses foreshadowing high spots or the spilling of gossip. And he's found a showcase for his talents in this historical remembrance of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, whose centenary was celebrated last week.

one of the United States' most respected political journalists, Alsop covered Washington during seven of the crucial New Deal and prewar years, 1935 to 1941. But it is his membership in the extended Roosevelt clan that makes the style of personal appropriate on and As Electron. memoir so apt. As Éleanor Roosevelt's first cousin once-removed and Franklin Roosevelt's more distant rel-etive, Alsop has an insider's natural grasp of the family, its background, its secrets.

With strictly familial pride, he ex-plains that the Roosevelts were not American aristocrats, as many histori-American aristocrats, as many historians contend, but from a social class that Alsop calls the "who was she's." They were "nice people," who asked, at the mention of a married couple known only by the husband's name, "Now, let me see, who was she?" Such Americans had the "habit of marrying well," but were hardly, in Edith Wharton's words, at the "apex of the pyramid."

of the pyramid."

And with an obvious if oblique reference to Roosevelt's famous affair with Lucy Mercer, he can suggest—again, as someone in the know—that the notoriously bad food served in the White House was one of Eleanor Roosevelt's "quiet revenges with a moral excuse," explaining that "if her husband did not like eating badly, why there were passages in their joint past she had not liked either."

It is, in fact, on the subject of the president's family that Alsop is at his best. Obviously, he pays obeisance to Roosevelt's great domestic successes and to his unflagging strength and foresight as commander in chief. The chronological picture sections, which are handsomely designed and intelli-gently researched, will further clarify the sheer weight of Roosevelt's influence for readers too young to remember a country that had one president so long that it could not imagine things any other way.

On the other hand, Alsop brushes over moments that might strike some as worthy of more comment, even within the long view of history. He re-calls that Roosevelt respectfully ig-nored the State Department while making foreign policy in the White House, and that he tried unsuccessfully to pack the Supreme Court. He reminds us that Roosevelt had sup-porters who would have done just about anything to get him elected and to keep him in power. (When Alsop wrote this book, we had yet to learn for certain that Richard M. Nixon was not the first president to tape proceedings in the Oval Office.)

All these foibles are explained prag-matically, however, even when the president badly used Alsop himself. In the summer of 1940, Alsop was "leaked" the news of Prime Minister British Navy. He wrote a column "de-nouncing the president as a mere polfrom for delaying the destroyer trans-fer so long." Only when the White House called to congratulate him on his article did he realize that "the fact that Roosevelt was attacked did not matter E damn to him as long as he was attacked for being too slow to do what he very much wanted to do."

But, then, Alsop never disguises his position. If he is "a sorry praiser of the past," he claims the role as a grerogative of age. If a reader suspects him of nostalgia, "the suspicion is well founded." If he lavishes his most flavorfui prose (and he's got a basful) on Roosevelt's detractors, it's because they are "vile." And if he grows misty whenever he mentions Roosevelt's disappointment in love, he believes that the affair with Mercer did much to "deepen, toughen, and mature his character and personality."

The natural consequence of Alsop's best audience among those who share his opinions. But Alsop's devotion to his subject has also resulted in a book

HOUSTON - The music from the movie "Rocky" hlared on the tape recorder in the gymnasium, a signal ordering the 75 female gymnasts back from their luncheon break. Bela Karolyi watched the girls organize quickly on the mats in front of him for the daily lec-

"So, today, we will talk about the wault," Karolyi began, his lilting Transylvanian accent innocently pronouncing a "w" for the "v" in vault. "The first thing we will talk about is the run. Your running can decide what kind of want you can do - how nice, how high, how good."
Off to the side, Pat Alexander,

one of the owners of the Sundance Athletic Club, followed Karoyli's animated delivery and watched the youthful pupils. "He's going to get American coaches thinking," Alexander said. "That should be good for gymnastics in this country."

Last April, Karoyli, the man who coached Nadia Comaneci to her gold-medal success at the 1976 Montreal Olympics, and Romania to a team title at the 1979 world championships, defected to the United States with his wife, Martha, and Geza Pozsar, the top choreographer for the Romanian na-tional team.

What followed was not the start of the American dream. Instead, Karolyi and his wife spent six lonely weeks in a Los Angeles ho-tel room trying to learn basic Eng-lish and to grapple with the hard facts of American capitalism. Only recently has Karolyi agreed to dis-cuss some of the problems that, at one point, caused him to wonder if he and his wife had made the right Karolyi won't discuss some events and specifics that followed the defection, but there were confusing offers of husiness deals and the worries about the couple's daughter, who had been left in Romania. While in their hotel in Los Angeles, the Karolyis realized that mastering English was occessary for survival. They bought language books and a tape recorder with cassettes.

I'd learned to expect these sudden twists in Two Ronnies' mood.

"Isn't it awful about Communism, T.R.?" I said. He ground his molars. "Comm and its Soviet masters are deceitful atheistic liars who have to be resisted at every street corner. The only thing they understand is iron firmness," be said.

The buzzer interrupted. I guessed he was needed outside to sign a hate pote to Andrei Groшуко.

"Hey, I thought you liked jelly beans, pal," he grinned when he bounded back into the room. He pressed a handful on me. "Eat and enjoy."

"Busy day," I said.
"Not 100," he said. "I just had to lift a grain embargo somebody put on wheat shipments to the Soviet Communists. Why do people do things like that to the Russians anyhow?"

The buzzer called again. He returned lighting mad. That'll fix their pudding," he muttered.
"What'll fix whose pudding,"

T.R.?"
"Poland's puddiog. I just slapped an embargo on them."

Another buzz. Another quick exit. While he was out a waiter brought in two plates of soul food and when T.R. returned he clapped his hands together and cried, "Oh boy! One of my favorites! Soul food!"

"I didn't know you liked black cuisine, T.R." "I wish you wouldn't think of cuisine in racial terms," he said. "I detest racial distinctions with eve-

The buzzer caught him with turnip greens between the plate and the lip. Coming back, he slammed the door so hard the windows shook.

"What a nerve," be cried. "What preposterous gall."

He was furious with rascally internal Revenue agents. "Would you believe it? They're making social policy. This time they've gone too far. They're using tax law to promote racial desegregation of

"Bet your bottom teeth I straightened them out. If there's one thing old Two Ronnies won't sit still for it's racism."

Before the huzzer could sound he was off again. He became philo-sophical when he came back. "Know what's destroying this country today? Unbalanced budgets. If they don't start balancing the budget, this country's going to be sitting on a pile of debt that reaches 67 miles into space."

The buzzer sounded very tired now. Out he went and back be came. Picking up our talk, I said, "You're right about those deficits, T.R. We just can't survive with deficits of $100 billion and more."

"Quit talking rot," he said. "The real trouble with this country today is the concentration of power in Washington, Unless we can pass government back to the states, it's all over with us."

Buzzer, Another exit. Another re-entrance. A heartwarming smile. "Let's get our cowboy boots on, saddle up and go horseback riding," he said.

Fortunately the buzzer had one last buzz, and when he exited I bolted. I was pretty sure the Ronnie who came back to go riding would be the one who accuses me of bruising his horse after it kicks me in the kidneys. New York Times Service

Ustinov the actor in "Evil in the Sun."

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss International Herald Tribune

MANILA — Peter Ustinov, who has impersonated Nero, Dr. Johnson, Socrates and King Lear, will try Beethoven next.
The burly British actor-dramatist with the pleasant English accent and the shape of a Russian bear has turned 60 and is on a world tour to publicize his latest screen vehicle, "Evil in the Sun." He attended its premiere at the Marila Internacional Film Festival and flew on to Australia and the United States for more promotional chores.

He recently finished a comic fantasy, "Beethoven's Tenth," to be produced in Londoo in May. In it, the composer returns from the shades to the Chelsea lodgings of a London mu-sicologist who knows every detail of his scores, most of which Beethoven himself has forgotten in his century and a half in the beyond. Fitted with a hearing-aid to overcome his deafness. the composer listens to modern music and begins a new symphony. "I would have liked to be Beethoven," says Ustinov, "but I simply haven't his equipment. So the role is a consolation for my theatted emission. I shall be for my thwarted ambition. I shall be Beethoven six nights a week and twice oo Wednesdays and Saturdays." Ustinov, in addition to his varied characterizations on stage, screen and television, he has written 18 plays, two novels, an antobiography, a volume of short stories and has also brought out a volume of caricatures. A translation of his novel "Krunnagel" was pub-lished in the Soviet Union last year. It became a best seller and he was invited to Moscow to be interviewed on television.

"I also inquired about my royal-ties," he added. "Until a few years ago international copyright was ignored in Russia. But I quoted Karl Marx about a worker being worth his labor and ac-quired a ruble fortune. A foreign au-thor can't take his earnings with him, but I now have a Soviet bank ac-

He is now working on the text for "one of those coffee-table books" on Russia for an English publisher, Between the photographs, be has room to explain that "what has happened in Russia and what is happening has less to do with Communism than with Russianism. Ustinov, who is half Russian, is in a position to know, Alexander Benois, the painter and scenie designer for Diaghiler's ballet companies, was his mother's uncle. "I was conceived in Petrograd, but born in Swiss Cottage, a London suburb," he chuckled. "I live like an Englishman, think like a Frenchman and have the soul of a Russian - or so I believe.

Does he attribute the publication of his novel in the Soviet Union to official approval of the concept of politi-cal assassination he outlines in his story? Its plot occurred to him when President Kennedy was shot in Dallas.

"No. I doubt that," he said. "Rather there seems to me a growing interest in my writing there." One of his plays, "Halfway up the Tree," a farce about the generation gap in the 1960s, is being acted in Russian theaters and he has discussed the translation of his autobiography, "Dear Me," with Russian publishers.

Because of his facility in many fields, British critics are reluctant to place Ustinov in the front line of English playwrights, though he has a wider range than most of them. His witty approach to topical issues, his ability to make the house roar, are held against him as an intellectual dramatist. Yet he has been a pioneer in the ano-establishment revolt.

Similarly, as an actor he is regarded as a maverick, avoiding typecasting as much as possible, "Because of the variety of roles I have played, I've become known as the man who can do any-thing. Well, I can't," he confessed. "I'm more like an elderly gun dog — a sudden aroma of something interesting — my nostrils twitch and I'm off."
Ustinov has played everything from Shakespeare to revue on the stage, has been twice the recipient of an Oscar and has won countless TV awards. He believes every role has its key, but is opposed to any systematic technique and dubious about the U.S. "method" school of acting, finding it humorless and limiting.

"Olivier, directing a play in New York, told a 'method' actor to move to the left. The actor was bewildered. 'I'll certainly do as you say, Sir Laurence, be jabbered, but wby I am to move to the left? It's not that I don't want to. I'm not particularly happy where I am, hut I feel no inner urge to move to the left. What is the motivation for my moving to the left? Your salary, snapped Olivier."

According to Ustinov, the challenge of change must be met if an actor is to develop his art. "The actor's metier is to be someone else and not to repeat an expected personality, a habit of Hollywood. I try not to be more than 15 people, and oever more than 12 at once, so as not to annoy and bore. If things are too easy I come a cropper, Fortunately, I have a placid tempera-

Nancy Reagan's new china was unveiled at a White House state dinner honoring President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt. The 4,372-piece set of ivory china with red and gold borders cost $209,508—an average of $48 per piece—paid for by a nonprofit foundation. Mrs. Reagan's press office put out a chart showing the cost of disber purchased in the administrations of Frankin Delano Roosevelt, Harry Truman and Lyndon Baines Johnson, which made the following comparisons: FDR — actual cost $9,301,20 ($74,108 in 1981 dollars); Truman — $28,271.40 ($96,100 in 1981 dollars); Johnson — $80,028.24 ($195,000 in 1981 dollars). Mubarak toasted the first lady, calling the new china "very elegant."

She is listed in stable condition at Womack Army Hospital Bennett, 20, suffered a dislocated elbow, two broken bones in her right wrist and a chipped right ankle bone. The 5-foot-2 Bennett had completed 850 jumps with only one sprained ankle on her record. But this time, her parachute failed to open at 2,000 feet. She pulled the cord on her reserve chute, thinking "something above my head is better than oothing," she said. Nothing happened, and she continued her earthward dive at a speed between 60 and 70 miles an hour. "I remember looking at the ground and saying. 'Oh gosh, here it comes,' " she said. "I turned my
